Good morning,

I've had a look at the analysis of the Corangamite names and they're looking good. I think though that the reason to name a division row could be strengthened. It might help to think of it from the perspective of what you would have in the profile on the website (examples are Lingiari, Solomon and Clark as they're all recent ones / have been re-done recently).

So off the top of my head, the options could be:

- Cox – in recognition of her work in teaching swimming and lifesaving to generations of Victorians
- Walling – in recognition of her innovative work as a landscape designer and work in documenting Australian horticulture
- Buckley – in recognition of his work with the Aboriginal people

Happy to have a look again before you show Steve.

Regards,

Nicole
