North Sydney

As society gets busy and the huge movement to the information age where people rely on computers to learn new information. North Sydney is an area where community has spoken and said we value community and care about people first. Kylea Tink is the leader of this community movement and it is sad that our community voice we worked so hard to build, is being taken away after we worked so hard to get it. Why can't we keep our voice as a community. It feels like we are moving towards big private schools where you are just a number instead of small caring public schools where people feel valued and are responsibly for the running of the school and we are dependent on each other for it to survive.

What's wrong with an old model of community that helps people feel a sense of belonging in a society that is alienating us from each other.

"It's our community our city and our country so we should have a Say North Sydney should stay!"
