Are cricketers really that noteworthy?
Do you think electorates should be named after them?
Mr Close is of the view that all you need to do to have an electorate named after you is to be a dead cricketer who played back in the first half of last century.
As for being an Invincible, surely there was more than one and surely were not going to name electorates after the rest of them?
William Alfred Brown may have been an outstanding cricketer, but the case for naming an electorate after him should rest on more than his sporting record or the era in which he played. It should consider his broader contribution to Australian society and whether his legacy warrants that particular honour. It doesnt.
